American University School of Public Affairs
Center for Environmental Policy invites you to attend

WORKING FOR A CLEANER, HEALTHIER ENVIRONMENT
Dialogue with the Acting Deputy Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), Stanley Meiburg

Monday, March 14, 2016
4:00 - 5:30 PM
Mary Graydon Center Room 3

Now well into its fifth decade, the Environmental Protection Agency has led the nation in greatly improving the quality of the natural environment. Still, more than ever, it is a flashpoint for conflicts over public health and environmental protection and how they are affected by economic issues. Stan Meiburg is the second in command with Administrator Gina McCarthy in leading the agency of 15,000 staff and an 8 billion-dollar budget, through its efforts to address climate change, air and water quality, chemical safety, and other issues.

Please join the Center for Environmental Policy to learn more about EPA’s priorities and challenges, discuss current environmental issues, and hear more about career prospects from what is often described as the most important environmental regulatory agency in the world.

We’ll discuss:

- Why is EPA a source of controversy?
- How can students prepare for careers in the environment, energy, and sustainability?
- How can students and others influence policy and politics in more positive directions?
- What are the challenges of leading a major agency in a time of polarized politics?

Dan Fiorino, Director of the Center for Environmental Policy, will moderate the conversation.

For more information visit www.american.edu/cep
Sponsored by the William K. Reilly Fund for Environmental Leadership and Governance